Enjoyable Card Party

The third in the series of Johnson Avenue Improvement Club parties was held Monday evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Synder.

The spacious rooms were well filled and a general feeling of sociability prevailed, as the people are beginning to feel quite like a "family gathering" now, the same general attendants being present, with additions and subtractions.

Two open wood fires lent their cheer to the scene and several beautiful ferns and other potted plants added their beauty to the rooms.

Several tables of "500", bridge and rook were played, while a particularly pleasant part of the evening's entertainment was the music furnished by Messrs. Lloyd Trousdell and William Barnes, of San Jose. Mr. Trousdell was extremely generous and sang a number of songs during the evening and Mr. Barnes played several solos, in addition to the accompaniments of the vocal numbers.

Delicious refreshments of chicken salad, hot buttered rolls, coffee, cake and salted almonds were served. Mr. and Mrs. Snyder were assisted in receiving and entertaining by their son and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. S. J. Huston, the president, Mrs. Higbie, and other members of the club.

Directors Banqueted

The annual banquet given by Messrs. J. F. Duncan, Ralston Alison, Roy Archibald and Miss Duncan, the bank force, to the directors of the Bank of Campbell was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Duncan Tuesday evening.

L. D. Bohnett, attorney for the Bank, having been called to Sacramento on business, was unable to be present. Following the banquet the evening was le asantly spent in conversation, Mr. J. L. Hagelin relating some of his interesting experiences in Alaska during the gold frenzy.

How the California Development Board's Exhibit Appealed to a Visiting Editor

Anyone who has ever gone carefully through the exhibits in the Ferry Building on San Francisco's "Embarcadero" must be deeply impressed with the variegation and richness of the resources of the great State of California.

Situated as these exhibits are, in a place where they are likely to be viewed by thousands upon thousands of mere passers-through, they must perform a very important part in persuading a number of the many casuals viewing them to remain and become identified with the great commonwealth.

It is the location of these exhibits in the Ferry Building, through which so many thousands of people pass each year, that makes them so valuable an advertising medium of the State's vast resources. They reach the possible customer. Being a permanent exposition they are always on the job, no matter when the possible customer sees fit to happen along.

A similar opportunity lies plainly before Honolulu, pleading to be grasped. A look at the "Crossroads" map, with its interweaving of trans-Pacific steamship lines, ought to be sufficient to convince the veriest advertising novice that here is an opportunity to do something in the way of a "Ferry Building" of our own, where we can install a permanent exposition of our various resources and many things of interest.

If the recent proposition of a "water gate" for Honolulu harbor ever reaches the state of fruition we should see to it that an upper story or two are reserved for Territorial exhibits on the Ferry Building plan, with which we may hope to entice a few more desirable trans-Pacifickers to abide with us.—"Paradise of the Pacific," Honolulu, H. I.

Stanford Victor

Stanford U defeated four basket-ball clubs in the south with a good safe margin but were defeated by the fast town team of Orange Christmas night by a score of 56 to 16.

Erwin Righter, one of the former Campbell High stars played forward in all the games but against Orange when he played center. He is playing a great game this year and showing up well in such company.

The principal scalp sought in the south was that of Whittier one of the strongest teams in the country in years past, and our boys trimmed them 46 to 12. Los Angeles Athletic Club lost 37 to 18. Long Beach Y. M. C. A. lost 42 to 27 and University of Southern California 43 to 28.

The champions of Washington and Oregon schools will come to California and play the state champions which will probably be Stanford or U. of C.

DADDY'S EVENING FAIRY TALE

BY MARY GRAHAM BONNER

PRINCE, THE HORSE.

"I have a true Story to tell you," commenced Daddy, "of a Horse who wouldn't be Sold!

"The Horse's Name was Prince, and he belonged to a Farmer who had six nice little Children.

"One day along the Road came a Man in a big Wagon, driving two Horses. The Children didn't like the looks of the Man though they didn't quite know why, until he said: 'That's a fine Horse you drove to town yesterday. I'll buy him from you for three hundred dollars.'

"The Farmer looked at Prince who was standing in the Field near the Stable having his Luncheon of Grass.

"'I hate to part with him,' said the Farmer. 'He's such a fine Horse, and the Children love him so.'

"'Of course, he's a fine Horse,' said the Man. 'And that is why I am willing to pay so much money for him.'

"Now the Farmer was not Rich—he was really Poor, and he needed three hundred dollars more than he needed Prince.

"'Well,' he said at last, 'I'll sell him to you.'

"'All right,' said the man. 'Hitch him to the back of my Wagon. I'll take him right along.'

"'No,' said the Farmer. "I won't let you take him now. All the Children are not here, and they'd want to say good-by to him. They're very fond of Prince. He has such a nice way with Children.'

"'Well, when can I have him?' asked the man rather crossly.

"'I'll bring him to Town tomorrow.'

"'All right,' said the Man, 'and I'll buy that little Wagon I saw him with yesterday.'

"'Tomorrow,' said the Farmer as the Man drove off.

"'Oh Daddy!' said the Children who had heard the talk between their Father and the Man. 'You aren't going to sell Prince, are you?' And the two youngest ones began to Cry. It was all the older ones could do to keep the tears back—and the Farmer sounded as though he'd like to Cry a little himself as he said: 'Children, I need that money. I must sell him. No other Horse I've got would bring so much Money to me.'

"And the Children didn't urge any more for they knew it was hard for their Daddy—but soon the rest of the Children with the Mother came home, and when they heard that Prince had been sold they all Cried too!

"'Come over here Prince,' they called. Prince walked out of the Gate which led into the Field and came across the Road to the Farm-House. He stood by the front Porch and all the Children put their Heads on his soft Head and Neck, and Kissed him, as the Tears streamed down their faces.

"'Here,' said the Mother, 'Sugar for Prince!' But Prince didn't want the Sugar. He neighed a thank-you, but he was very sad, for he knew something was wrong.

"'Have some long Grass,' said the Farmer. But Prince didn't seem to want to Eat. The Children sat up until very late that night. They got on Prince's Back and rode him up and down along the path behind the Barn and through the Field. Then he would come over by the Porch to be Petted.

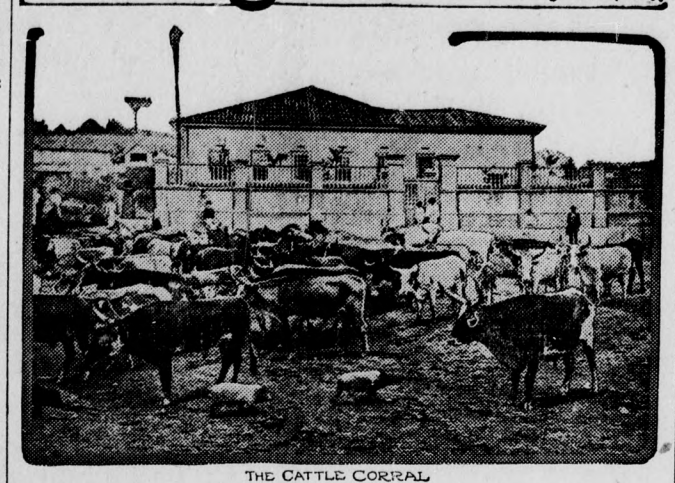
"The next morning when the Farmer got up—very early—for the Children had said their good-bys to Prince, and none of them could bear to see him go—he went over to the Stable and Hitched Prince to the Wagon.

"Prince gave a little whinny-whinny,' and licked his Master's hand.

"'Oh Prince, I hate to do that,' said his Master with tears. And Prince stamped with

"They started off, Prince holding the head of the horse that couldn't be sold, down the Road to Town.

Over the Pampas of Argentina



THE CATTLE CORRAL.

BEHIND eight galloping mules drawing a strong old coach of the style of a modified "forty-niner," we sallied forth from a little Argentine settlement on a journey that covered many days in the great outdoors of the far southland. Our mules were ridden by three young natives of the cowboy type who delighted in fast and reckless speed, while a fourth man sat on the driver's seat, one man to each pair of steeds, so it worked out. In addition to food for man and beast, the old coach carried only four passengers, writes William A. Reid in Los Angeles Times.

The time was November; and in Argentina the harvest days were drawing near, for be it remembered that seasons in the far South are reversed. As the day advanced and we became a mere speck moving across leagues and leagues—not acres—of pampa land the novelty of the journey gave place to serious thought. The farther we advanced the more lonely the whole country appeared, for we were not within the zone of waving fields of grain or the fenced-in estancia (farm). Around us stretched the open country and the far-away horizon closed the view; here and there gently rolling lands merged into level tracts that appeared to have no limit; the plains bore a brownish-green color, occasionally a windmill came into view.

Wherever the windmill stands one may expect to see well-trodden earth, for thousands of hoofs have obliterated every vestige of grass. Even the "dumb-driven beasts" seem to learn by intuition the location of this thirst-quenching spot, which to plainsman or animal is ever and always a welcome oasis. Near by this popular retreat the gaucho has his humble abode, and days, weeks or possibly months may pass with the sight of a few new faces; still he rides o'er the pampa and watches the grazing herds with a faithfulness not always appreciated by the landed proprietor, who lives in princely style miles away.

The custom of the actual owner of the estate spending a great part of the time away from home opens numerous opportunities for managers or superintendents on the estancia, and some of these executives have a vast amount of responsibility resting upon their shoulders.

On an Estancia.

"Quillalauquen," an average estancia, is located on the Southern railway within eight hours' train time of Buenos Aires. The area embraces over 100,000 acres; the stock consists of 103,000 sheep, 14,000 cattle, 2,600 horses, 800 milch cows, and thousands of swine. The personnel which keeps the wheels of this large establishment in good running order includes more than 500 men, women and children. The families are scattered over the estate; and to the head of each household is delegated certain duties. For instance, the milking of 800 cows twice daily is an enormous task. By systematic apportionment of the herd over the place, the actual number at any given point is not considered large. The enormous quantities of milk obtained are brought to a common point and certain portions dispatched daily to Buenos Aires.

A very busy season on the stock farm comes yearly at the end of cold weather, or about the first of November. More than 100,000 sheep must be sheared. So systematically is this work done that from 6,000 to 7,000 animals are relieved of their wool each day.

Presiding over this estancia is a young man, a native of Argentina, hardly out of his thirties. He and his wife are cultured and charming hosts, and it may be of interest to know that this young manager and his wife have visited the United States and traveled over the country from the Pacific to the Atlantic. They were delighted with their experiences and have many pleasant things to say about the people they met in the American States. At their home overlooking many square leagues of pampa [illegible] bears the name of "Quilla- [illegible] hands of genuine hos- [illegible] stretched.

for Sale.

[illegible] ce of Argen- [illegible] great ranch. [illegible] large for [illegible] w hun- [illegible] could [illegible] d, and said that money was no inducement to part with any of his lands; he really wanted more than he possessed, but none of his neighbors would sell their properties.

In the extreme northern section of the country—the Gran Chaco region, largely unexplored—I made the acquaintance of another gentleman of landed estates. He, too, owned many thousands of acres, but unlike the southern estancia, this area was almost a virgin wilderness. "Will you sell me a small portion of your land—a few hundred acres?" I inquired. "No," was the response, "I am keeping the land for my children. When a railroad is builded in this direction land values will increase, and my children will reap the benefits."

In visiting the marvelous vineyards of the Mendoza region, where the cultivation of the grape has almost reached perfection, I asked a similar question. The reply was, in effect, that few vineyards are for sale at a price that could be called reasonable.

These three practical illustrations show the time-honored tendency of the wealthy Argentinean to retain his possessions, and if possible increase rather than diminish their area, which in many cases has been handed down through families for generations.

Since the plowman and the mechanic have almost banished the lowing herd and the picturesque cowboy from our western plains, the young American who loves life in the open and its dash of recklessness occasionally seeks the newer field in the far southland. Some have found work riding o'er the Argentine pampas but, generally speaking, life on the pampa is gradually losing its former wild attractions. Furthermore, the wages paid the ordinary cowpuncher are rarely over $30 or $40 per month; the natives perform this labor and in many ways are as efficient or more so than the North American.

Traveling over Argentina impresses the visitor with the vastness of things in general; the range, the level pampa, the stock, the lonely cot, the far-distant horizon. He sees how the possession of vast estates and the revenue therefrom makes it possible for the owner to live in ease and delegate the active management of affairs to others. Even if the rich owner maintains a home on the pampa he is almost certain to have a more palatial residence in Buenos Aires, the Mecca for the great majority of Argentines. Furthermore, the wealthy ranchman or planter seeks still wider fields of diversion; with his family and servants he makes frequent and prolonged visits to Europe.

Fans of France.

At the time that Louis XV was king of France fan making had reached, perhaps, its highest point. It has not gone backward since then, but surely no fans could be made more exquisite than were those of the days of the glory of Versailles.

Du Barry and Mme. de Pompadour, the two most persistent favorites of Louis XV, were both very fond of fans, and many are the stories told of their extravagance in buying them—or, at least, ordering them, for the king had to pay for them. One that was chosen by Mme. de Pompadour took nine years in the making. It was made of paper cut like fine point lace, and the sticks bore medallions so tiny—but withal perfect—that they could only be made out by the aid of a very powerful microscope.

Imagination.

The gift of imagination appears to be the peculiar privilege of man. The architecture of the beaver is clever and ingenious, but the work of one beaver differs only from that of his fellow in the shape and nature of the wood at their respective command. The cells of a honeycomb, beautiful and mathematically correct as they are, differ in no particular from those in every other bee's construction. Every village boy knows that one thrush's nest is repeated, character for character, in that of another. With you it is different; each one of you can put something of himself into his work, and unless he does so he becomes a mere copyist, an echo and not a sound, a purveyor of "white-robed innocence" and "flower besprinkled meads."—Samuel Johnson.

HAVE QUEER GIFT

STEEPLE-JACKS MUST BE MEN WITHOUT NERVES.

Only Those Who Are Born to the Work Make Good in Perilous Occupation—Calls for Infinite Coolness and Resource.

"It's a good business—a pretty good business, if nothing happens," said a steeple-jack, speaking of his calling, which obliged him to repair a "chimney-top" 200 or 300 feet from the ground.

The steeple-jack's ability to keep his head and his feet, while working on a "top" which is a ledge, three feet wide, between abysses 500 feet deep, is a gift. Like the poet, the steeple-jack is born, not made. Charles Waterton, the naturalist, had the gift, and would have adorned the profession—the only one into which men do not drift.

When on a visit to Rome, Waterton determined to rival the feats of the Italian climbers who yearly scaled the dome of St. Peter's and the pinnacles of the castle of St. Angelo, to illuminate their summits on the feast of St. Peter. Eighty men used to climb the dome on two successive nights, and the boldest completed the spectacle by crowning the cross with a waving torch of fire. Each night's show was said, on the average, to cost a man's life. Waterton scaled the dome by daylight, and left his glove upon the vane.

A steeple-jack, employed entirely alone to mend a tall chimney-top in Pennsylvania, used to ascend leisurely every morning about ten o'clock, at an hour when "merchants most do congregate;" and when up, after surveying the gathered spectators, would further gratify them by standing on his head on the bare top of the 250 foot shaft.

The coolness and resources of these men were never better shown than in a case which happened in upper New York state a few years ago. A steeple-jack had flown his kite over a chimney, and subsequently drawn himself up to the top. He was just beginning his inspection of the work, when by some mishap he dropped his rope, and was left, like St. Simeon Stylites, alone on his pillar.

Attempts were made to fly another kite over him, but the wind had dropped. There were iron ladders inside the chimney, but the fires would have to be drawn, and the chimney let cool for hours.

The steeple-jack was then seen to unlace one of his shoes, take off the long blue stocking worn by workmen, and set to work carefully to unravel it, knotting the pieces of yarn together when necessary.

He then fastened a stone to the end, plumbed the depth, picked the other stocking to pieces, and added it to the first length of yarn, and let it down far enough to meet a tall ladder, from which he drew up, first a piece of strong string, next a rope, and then, after completing his inspection of the chimney-top, lowered himself to the ground.

To Get More Food From the Sea.

Increased cultivation of the sea is to be a feature of Great Britain's return to industrial life and papers read at the late British association meeting dealt with the importance of the inshore fisheries, showing that a considerable national asset can be developed by judicious extension of shell-fish production, shrimping and prawning, whitebait and sprat fishing, and herring fishing and curing. It was estimated that a cultivated mussel bed probably yields a greater value in highly nutritive food substance than a like area of land bearing a food crop. Mussels thrive in the slightly saline water of shallow estuaries receiving the drainage of cultivated lands and of towns and, while their food may be contaminated, it has been found that placing them for three hours in sterilized running water will completely free them from all sewage organisms. The war has emphasized the great value of the small fishing stations.

Drumheads in Mail 30 Years.

It took 30 years for two drumheads, ordered from a New York musical supply concern to reach their destination by mail. While a resident of Tarboro, N. C., James C. Mathews, now living in Charleston, W. Va., ordered two drumheads. That was in 1886, when he was a member of a minstrel company, and anxiously awaited the needed supplies. When they did not come he left instructions for them to be forwarded.

In August of this year he received by mail the delayed package encased in the original wrappers. The postmark showed that the package had been mailed shortly after the order was transmitted, but there was nothing to indicate where it had been during the intervening 30 years.

Canadian Maple Sugar Production.

Canada may become a rival of New England in the production of maple products. The aggregate export for five years, most of which was taken by the United States, was 8,685,000 pounds of sugar and 20,000 gallons of sirup. How much more was consumed by the producers cannot be learned from Canadian records. The province of Quebec is the chief producer, but the maple tree is of so common a growth in Canada that the production might be very greatly increased, and doubtless would be it it appeared profitable to the Canadian farmers.

Two Roumanian Cities

SCENE IN CONSTANZA.

BECAUSE Constanza, Roumania's chief seaport, was the logical place for the landing of Russian troops and supplies bound for the Hungarian and Bulgarian frontiers, it has been smitten by the iron fist of war, and since its swift capture by the Teutons has endured the hard fate of being repeatedly bombarded by its friends.

Before the war this thriving little city of 27,000 inhabitants handled practically all the surplus wheat raised by the Roumanian peasants which did not find its way up the Danube to the great flour mills of Budapest, says a bulletin of the National Geographic society.

Until hostilities began in 1914, Constanza was also the transfer point for the extensive passenger service from London, Paris, Brussels, Berlin, Vienna and Budapest to Constantinople and the near East. Here express steamers connected with the de luxe trains from the west, making the run to the Sublime Porte overnight.

Millions of dollars have been spent on the harbor and docks of Constanza since the town became a Roumanian possession by the treaty of Berlin, which transferred the Dobrudja province to this country. The principal improvements were begun in 1896.

On Site of Ancient City.

Constanza, or Kustendje, with its wide, clean streets, its numerous mosques, synagogues and church, occupies the site of the ancient Tomi, Tomis or Tomes, the metropolis of the Euxine. The remains of many columns and fragments of statuary testify to the importance and the wealth of the city in those days. In the fourth century Constantine the Great changed the name of the port to Constantiana, in honor of his sister. During the reign of Theodosius it experienced an era of great prosperity as the metropolis of Pontus, but after it passed under the control of the Bulgars and later of the Turks its decline was rapid. In the Russo-Turkish war of 1812 it was bombarded by the Russians, and 17 years later surrendered to the same power without a blow in its defense.

Probably the most noteworthy event in the history of ancient Tomi was its designation by the Emperor Augustus as the place of exile of the great Latin poet, Publius Ovidius Naso, familiarly known as Ovid. The poet's offense was the publication of "Ars Amatoria," which enjoys the questionable distinction, according to no less an authority than the Oxford scholar, George Sidney Owen, of being perhaps the most immoral work ever written by a man of genius. Augustus had become peculiarly sensitive about such literature because he had been forced to banish and disinherit his own daughter, the brilliant and beautiful Julia, on account of her scandalous intrigue with the son of Mark Antony. This disgrace was followed by a second scandal in the imperial family—the notorious behavior of the younger Julia, the emperor's granddaughter. As Socrates was charged with having corrupted the youth of Athens, so Ovid was deemed by Augustus as at least in part responsible for the corruption of youthful society in Rome. Therefore he was ordered to leave the capital and take up his residence at Tomi, where he remained for the last eight years of his life, bitterly complaining of his fate in a series of letters, compiled as the five books of the "Tristia."

Turnu Severin a Busy Town.

Turnu Severin was the first town in Roumania to receive a baptism of iron after hostilities were declared between that country and Austria-Hungaria. It is an 11-mile voyage down the Danube from the international boundary line at Verciorova to a point opposite Turnu Severin. This busy Roumanian town of 8,000 inhabitants, pleasantly situated on high ground and partly hidden from the river by trees, has important shipyards and repair shops for the Danube Steamship Navigation company, and is a center for trade in petroleum, cereals and preserved meats. It is supposed to derive its name from the ruins of an old tower in the vicinity which is said to have been built in commemoration of one of the victories of the Roman emperor, Severus.

It was at Turnu Severin that King Charles I, who died only a few weeks after the outbreak of the European war in 1914, first landed on Roumanian soil in May 1866, and was hailed by the populace as the successor to their first prince, Colonel Cuza, who, as Alexandru John I, had been forced to abdicate a short time previously. Charles was the second son of Prince Charles Antony of Hohenzollern-Sigmaringen, and at the time his name was submitted to the people of Roumania (he was chosen by a vote of [illegible]069 to 224) was an officer in the Prussian army. As the king of Prussia was pledged to support a native noble for the Roumanian principality, Charles could not be espoused openly, but upon the advice of Bismarck he resigned his commission in the Prussian army and, under an assumed name and with a forged passport, made his way down the Danube into the country over which he was to rule most successfully, first as prince and later as king, for more than half a century.

A short distance below Turnu Severin is the little village of Kladova, which in Roman times was known as Egota, the station from which Trajan's two roads of conquest diverged, one up the banks of the Danube and the other striking north into Dacia. It was the latter road which necessitated the construction of the famous Trajan bridge across the Danube at this point, the largest in the Roman empire. How well the great Damascus architect, Apollodorus, designed this structure is indicated by the fact that after more than 1,800 years portions of some of its 20 stone piles described by the historian Gibbon are still to be seen, and perhaps it would have done service for centuries had it not been destroyed to prevent the invasion of the territory south of the river by the Goths. The remains of this famous work were not discovered until 1884, the honor of the find being credited to Michael Joseph Quin, who made a systematic search for the piers while accompanying the Hungarian road-builder, Count Szechenyi, on one of his journeys down the Danube. The stones which are now disclosed at low water are the ruins of piers 145 feet high, 58 feet broad and 163 feet apart. When the Roman sappers overthrew them to check the march of the barbarian enemy the masonry dammed the waters.

WHERE FLOOD BEAT A KING

Termonde, Belgium, Routed Army of the Grand Monarque by Cutting the Dykes.

Termonde, a prosperous town of 10,000 inhabitants at the beginning of the war, spreads over both banks of the Dender river and the right bank of the Scheldt, the Dender forming a juncture with the larger waterway at this point, says a war geography bulletin of the National Geographic society on one of the cities of Belgium.

Situated only 16 miles east of Ghent the great heart of Flemish history, Termonde itself has a past of which its citizens may well feel proud. It was here that Louis XIV suffered an ignominious defeat at the very beginning of his War of Devolution, or Queen's War, in which he set about to upset political customs and substitute civil usage in the matter of royal inheritance. Louis' defeat was due not to the prowess of the city's garrison but to the self-sacrifice of her people, who employed the irresistible waters of the North sea to fight their battle for them, as has been the case so many times in the history of the Low Countries. The dykes were cut and the investing army of the Grand Monarque fled before the flood.

During the War of the Spanish Succession Termonde bravely resisted the great English general, Marlborough, but after a ten days' bombardment was forced to yield.

On many maps Termonde goes by its Flemish name of Dendermonde. At the outbreak of the war it was one of the five fortified towns of Belgium, but its defenses were not of modern design. The city is 25 miles by rail southwest of Antwerp. The most interesting buildings in Termonde are the Hotel de Ville (formerly the Cloth hall), a fourteenth century structure, and the Gothic church of Notre Dame, which contains two valuable pictures by Van Dyck.

Termonde is only 20 feet above sea-level, a fact which accounts for the ease with which the surrounding country was flooded when besieged in 1667, Hints for Campers.

Two items set forth in the bulletin of the California state board of health upset some traditions which have been maintained by campers and trappers from time immemorial. There is widespread belief that rapid streams purify themselves and that lemon juice in water has a sterilizing effect. Neither is true.

Lemon juice is not an antiseptic. Unless lemonade is made of pure water, the danger of infection is just as great as though no lemon juice and sugar are added.

As to the purification of running streams, a swift flow over stones has always been considered an advantage. Some professional campers even go so far as to state exactly the number of stones needed to purify the stream. A delusion. The principal purifying agents are sunlight, sedimentation, and the action of certain minute organisms.

The safest and best method of operation for automobilists or trampers in strange country is to carry jugs of drinking water, ignoring wayside streams, no matter how tempting they may look.

Not Flattered.

An old Scotch woman, who had resisted all the entreaties of her friends to have her photograph taken, and who was at last induced to consent, in order that she might send her likeness to her son in America, is the heroine of the following anecdote:

On receiving the first proof, she failed to recognize the figure thereon represented as herself; so, card in hand, she set out for the artist's studio.

"Is that me?" she queried.

"Yes, madam," replied the artist.

"And is it like me?" she again asked.

"Yes, madame, it's a speaking likeness."

"A weel," she said resignedly. "It's a humblin' sicht."

Emergence of Arabia as a Separate Nation Is Climax Of a Century of Revolts

The sudden emergence of Arabia as a separate unit in the great war is a continuation of a series of revolts against Turkish control since 1818, when it was annexed by that nation for the second time in its uneasy history. From 1882 to 1908 there have been eight revolts. Its happiest days were those of the pre-Islamic period during which it was powerful enough to defeat the Romans in 24 B. C., and to resist all other foreign invasion until 522 A. D., when it was conquered by the Abyssinians.

Mecca was compared by Burton to Bath, but has been likened by other writers to "Florence without beauty." It has had a full share of flood, fire and sword, but is said never to have suffered from any serious epidemic. This seems the more remarkable because the city lies at the lowest level of a valley which must be a cesspool, and the sewage, having no outlet, percolates into the wells. The immunity, ascribed by Mohammedans to miraculous interposition of providence on behalf of "Mecca the Inviolable," is due to the dry climate, the fact that most of the inhabitants have the fine physical vigor needed for a long journey, and the absence of destitution. The thousands seen begging are "beggars at a fair," reaping the harvest of wealth brought by pilgrims.—London Chronicle.

Younger Brother Held Down By Attitude of His Elders

If a younger brother ever amounts to anything it is in spite of his older brothers. The treatment he receives at their hands while he is young makes it almost impossible for him to meet and talk to people when he is grown. They find fault with everything he does, and bring their combined influence to bear in an effort to get him to run away from home. The result is that he keeps out of their presence, and since they are so down on him he presumes that other people are also down on him, says a writer.

He gets to looking and acting like a homeless hound that is hated by everybody in the neighborhood. The poor hound has had so many rocks thrown at him by men, women and children that he has quit looking for a friend. When he sees anyone coming he goes off at full speed, and gives a yelp, as if he had already been hit. When the younger brother sees one or more of his older brothers he turns off and goes in another direction.

The oldest boy in the family deserves little credit even if he wins wealth and fame, but if the younger brother ever reaches the point where he can earn a dollar a day, he should be crowned with bays.

Wise and Otherwise.

Every man can be wrong, but not every man can be president.

No man ever does as much today as he is going to do tomorrow.

No man can expect to be happily married unless he's a good listener.

It's easier for a dentist to fill an aching void than a long-felt want.

A man may pocket his pride, but a woman always has to conceal it elsewhere.

After hearing some men speak we are surprised at the small hats they wear.

Whining children and women are bad enough, but please deliver us from whining men.

After getting an education it is up to a young man to do things with the knowledge he acquires.

Somehow a woman never seems to tire of her efforts to get an article worth all of a dime for 12 cents.

Our idea of a credulous man is one who actually believes that one woman can treat another with silent contempt.

There are more ways than one of looking for trouble. A Texas man advertised for his mother-in-law, who was missing.

UGH! A DOSE OF NASTY CALOMEL

It salivates! It makes you sick and you may lose a day's work.

You're bilious, sluggish, constipated and believe you need vile, dangerous calomel to start your liver and clean your bowels.

Here's my guarantee! Ask your druggist for a 50 cent bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone and take a spoonful tonight. If it doesn't start your liver and straighten you right up better than calomel and without griping or making you sick I want you to go back to the store and get your money.

Take calomel today and tomorrow you will feel weak and sick and nauseated. Don't lose a day's work. Take a spoonful of harmless, vegetable Dodson's Liver Tone tonight and wake up feeling great. It's perfectly harmless, so give it to your children any time. It can't salivate, so let them eat anything afterwards.—Adv.

Helping the Midget.

Mickey O'Doolan was a noble-minded lad, full of sympathy for the poor, always ready to succor the oppressed, keen to right the wrongs of the world. One day, passing a stonemason's yard he saw two men sawing through a huge block of stone with one of those large, double-handled saws. One of them was six-foot-two, the other a little chap of four-foot-one.

Leaning against the wall, Mickey watched them swaying back and forth for a few minutes; then he rushed forward and dealt the tall man a blow on the side of the head, knocking him senseless.

"Now," he exclaimed, as he stood over the prostrate form, "now will yez let the little chap have it, yez dirty, hulking bully?"—Pittsburgh Chronicle-Telegraph.

Old Idea of Gulf Stream, Once Taught in Schools, Changed by Later Study

It is only by speaking loosely that the skippers of several incoming ships can say, as reported, that the presence of many sharks along the coast was due to a shifting of the Gulf stream. What they mean was that the northeast drift of warm water is greater than usual, broader, perhaps, or closer inshore, or possibly a degree or two higher in temperature than is customary at this time in this latitude, says the New York Sun.

The Gulf stream as a distinct current cannot be identified north of the thirty-second parallel of latitude, which it crosses between the Bermudas and the Carolina coast. There it divides into small streams. The westerly winds blow upon it and break up its surface. Its warm waters become mixed with the colder ocean and it becomes an element of the northeast. At the same time the warm currents are recognizable as far north as 40 degrees latitude, a trifle south of New York; beyond 40 degrees north and 60 degrees west longitude no test of temperature, saltness, color or motion serves to distinguish them from the rest of the ocean drift.

Who does not remember having it impressed on him in his schooldays that the ministrations of the gulf stream alone made habitable the British Isles? It is not true, as patient study has shown. The southwest winds bring moisture from the ocean to Europe, and this great blanket of moist air contains much more latent heat than dry air at the same temperature. From the moist air come clouds, fogs and rain, which condense heat and water upon the Old World and prevent the loss of ground heat by radiation. That is why there is such a striking difference in temperatures upon a single line of latitude cutting the two continents.

While the warm water flows northeast from the Mexican gulf the cold water on the north is finding its way southwesterly, deeper down. When the cold current strikes the tropical zone it becomes heated and rises to flow northeast again. The Gulf of Mexico is like the coil of pipe in a gas water heater; it supplies intense heat in a small area and adequately tempers half the seas.

MOTHER'S COOK BOOK

Nothing is easier than fault-finding, no self-denial, no brains, no character are required to set up in the grumbling business.—Robert West.

Pork Cake.

Take one cupful each of fat chopped salt pork, boiling water, molasses, dried apple and sugar. Add the boiling water to the pork; cook the molasses and a cupful of dried apple which has been soaked over night, a teaspoonful of cinnamon and a half a teaspoonful each of cloves and nutmeg with a half cupful of raisins, three hours; add the other ingredients, two eggs, one teaspoonful of soda and two of cream of tartar, flour to make a soft dough. Bake slowly one hour.

Crumb Cake.

Mix well together one-half a cupful of butter, one and a half cupfuls of sugar, two cupfuls of flour. Add two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, two eggs, a cupful of milk and a teaspoonful of flavoring. Mix the sugar, butter and flour together; when well blended take out a cupful of the mixture and add the eggs, well beaten, the milk and flavoring to the remainder. Put into the cake pan and sprinkle with the reserved cupful of the mixture. Bake in a moderate oven.

Cinnamon Bun.

Cream a half cupful of butter, add a cupful of sugar gradually, then the yolks of two eggs beaten lightly, two cupfuls of flour sifted with two teaspoonfuls of baking powder and a teaspoonful of cinnamon, add a half cupful of milk alternately with the flour, then add a half cupful of raisins and fold in the whites of the eggs. Bake in a sheet and, while hot, spread generously with butter, and sprinkle with powdered sugar and cinnamon mixed together.

Lunch Cake.

Soften, but do not melt, a third of a cupful of butter, add a cupful and a third of brown sugar, two eggs, a half cupful of milk, three teaspoonfuls of baking powder, a half teaspoonful each of cinnamon and nutmeg grated, one and three-fourths cupfuls of flour. Beat all together three minutes, add a half cupful of raisins, and bake 40 minutes in a moderate oven.

Apple Sauce Cake.

Mix well a cupful of sugar, a half cupful of shortening and a cupful of sifted apple sauce, then add a teaspoonful of soda, half a teaspoonful each of cinamon and cloves, one and three-fourths cupfuls of flour and currants and raisins. No eggs are used in this cake.

Why Rubber Is Scarce.

Suffered Several Years. PERUNA MADE ME WELL

Its My Standby for a Cold.

Mrs. Elizabeth Reuther, 1002 11th St., N. W., Washington, D. C., writes: "I am pleased to endorse Peruna as a splendid medicine for catarrh and stomach trouble, from which I suffered for several years. I took it for several months, and at the end of that time found my health was restored and have felt splendidly ever since. I now take it when I contract a cold, and it soon rids the system of any catarrhal tendencies."

Those who object to liquid medicines can now procure Peruna Tablets.

Erzerum.

Erzerum, which has suddenly sprung into the notice and interest of the world during the progress of the present Russian campaign in the East, says the Manchester Guardian, has been identified with the Byzantine Theodosiopolis, which was a fortified outpost of the Grecian empire. It fell to the Seljuks in the year 1201, and just three centuries later passed to the Turks. It had already on two occasions been in possession of the Russians—in 1829, when it was captured and held until the peace of Adrianople of that year, and in 1878, when it was restored to the Turks after the treaty of Berlin.

The normal population of Erzerum amounts to about 43,000, ten or twelve thousand of whom are Armenians and 2,000 Persians. Its public buildings, with the possible exception of one, which dates back to the beginning of the Seljuk period, are of no particular distinction. As in most towns in Turkey, the streets are narrow, crooked, dirty and badly drained, and there are few trees in the neighborhood.

Strict Censorship.

"Your letters are not very fervent, dearest," said Algy, down for an afternoon at the beach. "They contain very few terms of endearment."

"I can't help it, Algy. I should like to put in many terms of endearment, but my letters are censored by mother."

Garfield Tea was Your Grandmother's Remedy for every stomach and intestinal ill. This good old-fashioned herb home remedy for constipation, stomach ills and other derangements of the system so prevalent these days, is in even greater favor as a family medicine than in your grandmother's day.—Adv.

Cubic Stone.

To keep in touch with the news of the world, which is now bringing forth a strange array of words from all the corners of the earth, one must needs have the knowledge of a Mezzofanti or be the possessor of a polyglot dictionary. The war between the Turks and Arabians has released a number of words, some of which, like the Arabian terms "alkali," "algebra," "astrology," etc., may in time be adopted into our language. Here is the Arabic word "kaab," "the cubic stone;" this is the stone which, according to Mohammedan tradition, was brought by Adam from Paradise and became black through the sins of men. The stone is at Medina. It is covered by a veil, which is raised by the pilgrims who come from great distances to kiss it. It has been called, irreverently, the blarney stone of Mohammed. At the side of the tomb of Mohammed is a tomb awaiting Jesus, whom the Mussulmans regard as one of their prophets.—Indianapolis News.

Photographs Eruption on Sun.

Astronomer Evershed at Svinagar, Kashmir, has photographed an eruptive prominence of exceptional altitude on the disk of the sun. The photographs were obtained at intervals from near the beginning of the outburst until the final fragments had risen to a height of a little more than a semidiameter from the sun's limb. The velocity away from the sun was 190 kilometers per second and faint extensions could be traced at 18 minutes from the limb, representing a height of close upon a half million miles. Astronomers say this would appear to be the highest prominence which has yet been recorded as appearing on the surface of the sun.

Uncle Sam Is "Poor Pay."

Mrs. Norton, living in poverty, but still hopeful, in a New York tenement, is the widow of Marcus P. Norton, the inventor of the postage cancellation stamp used in the United States. His claim to the invention was acknowledged and patented by the United States government. Its use by the post office department was authorized, and, according to the department's own figures, that use has saved the government $20,000,000. The government 40 years ago offered him $100,000 in settlement. A Step Forward

Campbell is soon to take one step forward and this is how it is to happen. Yesterday, Mr. N. F. Taylor, Route Agent for Wells Fargo & Company, together with Will E. Wright, was looking carefully over the wings of our town for the purpose of making the Express Business more efficient here and it was decided by the Company to place the Express Office with Mr. ... a few weeks the Office ... Mr. Wright's building ... of Campbell. Mr. ... making maps of ... establishing a ... will make it

THE man who rides the state highways with the speed of a maniac is a near-criminal and deserves the severest treatment. One, Harry Natress, admitted that he had been driving not over 75 or 80 miles per hour. Luckily, no one was hurt but chance favored all on that road at the time. He will probably be tried at several towns for the same trip and it is hoped he will draw the limit of sentence and fine for his escapade.

WILD and Wooly Montana is to have a state wide vice war headed by the newly installed Attorney-General S. C. Ford. Every county attorney has been urged by circular letter to enforce the red-light laws. When that state is moved to such acts other states will surely follow.

Mrs. Abigail Butler, whose 75th birthday occurred on Sunday, celebrated the event with a party Monday afternoon, only guests who had passed three-score and ten being present.

Naturally reminiscences and bits of personal history entered largely into the conversation, which was interspersed with several fine numbers on the graphophone.

A delicious collation was served, a pretty birthday cake decorating the table. Mrs. Butler was assisted by Mrs. Waite and Mrs. Rubell.

Buddhism's Hades.

The infernal regions of Buddhism are horrible. They comprise a great hell and 136 lesser hells. In these hells, according to the sculptures of the Buddhist temples, men are ground to powder and their dust turned into ants and fleas and spiders. They are pestled in a mortar. The hungry eat redhot iron balls. The thirsty drink molten iron.

Islamism says of the infernal regions: "They who believe not shall have garments of fire fitted for them. Boiling water shall be poured on their heads and on their skins, and they shall be beaten with maces of iron."—London Chronicle.

Mr. W. B. Kammerer talked on the new school building, explaining what the school board has accomplished with the money, which they have stretched to its utmost capacity and have all but performed miracles with, altho necessarily there will be a number of things that will have to be taken care of in the future.

The offer of Messrs. Halamicek and Kalas and Miss Bozena Kalas to give a concert, the full proceeds of which are to be given for something for the benefit of the school, was accepted. The date was not settled upon but it will be as soon as possible after the completion of the auditorium.

How much do you know of the way in which the milk that you drink is produced and handled?

All the diseases such as Tuberculosis, Typhoid, Colic, etc., could be wiped out of existence so far as milk is concerned if people would study the milk that is delivered to them with half the care with which men scrutinize the cigars they buy and the women the chocolates they consume.

Clean milk from clean cows, kept under clean conditions, collected in clean receptacles, and distributed in clean bottles is the choicest of all the infinite products of the laboratory of nature.

Such, do we claim our milk to be. Nor do we ask you to take our word for it,—investigate other plants, then see ours.
